MIT Academy of Engineering	Event type:	Cultural (Non-Technical)
STUDENT ACTIVITY: CULTURAL	Event level:	Institute
	Cultural Head:	Mr.B R Patil
	Activity:	Formation of Student council:

Determine the need:

The first step in forming a student council is to identify the need for such a council. The college administration should evaluate the current situation and determine if a student council is required. This can be done by assessing the level of student involvement in decision-making, evaluating the effectiveness of current communication channels, and analyzing the need for a platform for student representation.

Draft a proposal:

Once the need for a student council is identified, a proposal should be drafted outlining the purpose, structure, and responsibilities of the council. The proposal should include details such as the council's objectives, the number of members, the selection process, and the term of office.

Election of council members:

After the proposal is approved, the next step is to hold elections to select the council members. The election process should be transparent, fair, and open to all students. The council members should be selected based on their leadership skills, communication skills, and ability to represent the student body effectively.

Organize a council meeting:

Once the council members are elected, the first council meeting should be organized. The meeting should be used to introduce the council members to each other, discuss the council's objectives, and establish a plan of action.

Establish sub-committees:

The council should establish sub-committees to focus on specific areas of responsibility such as academic affairs, student welfare, cultural events, and sports activities.

Seek approval:

The proposal should be presented to the college administration for approval. This may involve presenting the proposal to the college management or student affairs office.

Set goals and priorities:

The council should set specific goals and priorities for the term of office. These goals should be aligned with the council's objectives and should be realistic and achievable.

Communicate with the student body: The council should regularly communicate with the student body, keep them informed of the council's activities and progress, and seek feedback and suggestions from them.

Event Planning:

The first step in organizing a cultural event is to plan it thoroughly. This includes identifying the purpose, scope, target audience, date, time, venue, and budget for the event.

An event committee should be formed with representatives from various departments or organizations in the college. The committee will be responsible for managing different aspects of the event, including logistics, finances, promotion, and coordination.

Permissions:

Ensure that all necessary permissions and approvals are obtained from the college authorities, including the principal or dean, student affairs office, and information to campus security.

Budget:

Determine the budget for the event and identify potential sources of funding, such as sponsorships, ticket sales, or donations.

Event Promotion: Promote the event using different mediums, including social media, flyers, posters, and email invitations.
